Overview

Cleveland Clinic Children's will present Perspectives in Pediatrics: From Theory to Practice, on May 8 – 10, 2014 at the new Global Center for Health Innovation and Cleveland Convention Center in downtown Cleveland. This live CME-certified educational activity is designed to present an in-depth, evidence-based review of current clinical issues involved in the care of pediatric patients. It is primarily targeted to health care providers in pediatrics, family medicine, and pediatric nurse practitioners; however, all practitioners will be interested in the educational material.

By attending, you will be able to:

- Discuss how to implement the latest recommendations and address the challenges associated with pediatric immunization.
- Summarize recently published public health reports in pediatric patients and discuss their implications for clinical care.
- Critically evaluate recent trends in the diagnosis and management of adolescent health concerns.
- Present clinical practice updates in behavioral disorders and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, obesity, sleep apnea, gastrointestinal disorders, asthma, dermatology, urinary tract infections, and sinusitis/otitis media.
- Screen and identify learning disorders and autism in pediatric patients.
- Accurately perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation when indicated during office emergencies.

Who Should Attend?

Health care providers in pediatrics, family medicine, including pediatric nurse practitioners, and physician assistants although all practitioners interested in pediatric medicine will find this conference beneficial.
