This one day event focuses on quality outcomes for people with Dementia and will open with a keynote address from Professor Alistair Burns National Clinical Director for Dementia NHS England who will discuss priority objectives for immediate benefits for people with dementia and their carers, improving diagnosis and post diagnostic support, de-stigmatising dementia and driving improvements in health and care.

“We are only at the start of a journey when it comes to dementia care: as a society we have ignored the condition for much too long – and unless we get better at recognising and caring for people with dementia we will have failed the million people who will have the condition in England by the end of the decade.” Jeremy Hunt, Secretary of State for Health, 28th May 2014

“For too long dementia had been an illness that went unnoticed until it was too late, and there is an unacceptable variation in dementia services across the country” Prof Alastair Burns, National Clinical Director for Dementia, NHS England March 2014

“We are clear that dementia will still remain the biggest health challenge facing the country today and in the future – with still much more to do... A continued national focus and drive will still be necessary beyond the life time of the Prime Minister’s Challenge on Dementia. Some people with dementia and their carers are still facing a journey through their condition without access to the care and support they need and that is why the Secretary of State’s ambition that everyone diagnosed with dementia should receive high quality post-diagnosis support, for example someone who can help and advise like a dementia adviser, access to high quality personalised information to help them understand and manage their condition and access to support services such as reminiscence and counselling, is so important.” Progress on the Prime Minister’s Challenge on Dementia: Year Two, 7th May 2014

Through expert sessions, case studies and the experiences of those with dementia and their carers this conference focuses on delivering quality outcomes for people with dementia: driving improvements in health and care.
