Improving Quality in Day Surgery

Thursday 20 November 2014 ICO Conference Centre London

“Day surgery is now provided for a wide range of procedures, in patients ranging from the very fit to the rather frail, in facilities ranging from purpose built, self contained day units, to those where in-patients and day cases are combined. However the elements of high quality care for a day surgery patient should be provided for all regardless. BADS Quality Indicators can be used to assess and improve the quality of care at each stage of the pathway for all day surgery patients”

Dr Anna Lipp President The British Association of Day Surgery

Day Surgery rates have steadily improved nationally over the last decade and for many procedures day case management is now the norm. However, while the numbers of patients managed as a day case has steadily increased, the capacity of the facilities designed for day case surgery may not have increased in proportion. Consequently many patients are now being managed in areas that have not been designed specifically for day surgery patients, by teams of staff who may lack the expertise of staff based in dedicated day surgery facilities.

When the focus is on the numbers of procedures that can be performed and achieving efficiency, quality of care can often be overlooked. This has been only too evident in recent times and the British Association of Day Surgery is now focussed on ensuring that day surgery is delivered to the highest possible standards.

Day surgery procedures range from the very minor to the rather complex; patients can be extremely fit or very frail; facilities range from stand alone day units to facilities shared with in-patients. The provision of quality in day surgery care must be consistent and measurable despite this wide variation.

BADS has distilled the elements of a high quality day surgery experience into a set of BADS quality indicators that can be used to measure quality of care throughout the pathway for a day surgery patient. The indicators can be used by staff working in day surgery to ensure they are providing high quality care and also be used by external evaluators to rapidly assess the quality of a day surgery service.

This conference, which has been produced by the British Association of Day Surgery, will discuss how a quality service can be provided and evaluated at each stage of the patient's pathway for a day surgery procedure
