Screening of Oral Cancer and Differential Diagnosis of Soft Tissue Lesions (5 Live CEUs)

Mark Lingen, DDS, PhD, FRCPath

Description: Oral and oropharyngeal cancer is an aggressive epithelial malignancy. Despite advances in treatment, long-term survival have remained modest. Early detection and prevention are critical for improved long-term survival. This lecture reviews etiologic factors associated with oral and oropharyngeal SCC. In the afternoon, we will review common categories of soft tissue lesions. Although many of these lesions do not carry significant morbidity, dental professionals must differentiate potentially benign conditions from those more serious.

Lecture Objectives:

- Review appearance of premalignant lesions and difference between benign and dangerous soft tissue lesions
- ADA Clinical Guidelines for oral cancer screening.
- Critical role of dental professionals in early detection and prevention.
