The DSM-5-TR Substance-Related and Addictive Disorders chapter is one of the most frequently used—and often challenging—sections of the DSM. As diagnostic criteria continue to evolve alongside advances in research, clinicians must be able to apply them consistently and accurately across a wide range of clinical presentations. This interactive workshop explores the historical evolution of the DSM, highlights key changes to the DSM-5-TR, and strengthens participants' confidence in applying substance use diagnoses. Through discussion of real-world clinical scenarios, including considerations for patients using medical marijuana, participants will gain practical strategies for making accurate, defensible diagnostic decisions while improving inter-rater reliability across providers.

Learning the DSM doesn't have to be dry! This fast-paced, engaging workshop combines case vignettes, group discussion, and hands-on diagnostic exercises to make mastering the DSM both practical and enjoyable. Whether you're new to the DSM-5-TR or looking to sharpen your diagnostic skills, you'll leave with greater confidence, a deeper understanding of the criteria, and tools you can immediately apply in clinical practice.
