Over the years, we have come to realise the value of trauma care in the training of young surgeons. It is the intention of the Asia Pacific Orthopaedic Association and the Trauma Section to advance the status of trauma care in our region and unify the systems of trauma care so that we may all speak the "same language of trauma".

At the same time, bone and joint infections are very much related to the history of the formation of the APOA. The strategy of care is fascinating as it involves the basic sciences of medical microbiology, pharmaco-therapeutics and surgery. It is a fact that many of the infections we encounter in our major cities are post-traumatic.

Thus, the synergy of holding a trauma meeting with the infection section is obvious.

Take this opportunity to strengthen your foundation in the management of orthopaedic trauma and infection.

David S. K. Choon

President, Asia Pacific Orthopaedic Association (APOA)
