Preface

The chronic inflammatory bowel diseases Crohn's disease and ulcerative colitis have a major impact on patient's health-related quality of life and the treatment-related costs place a significant burden on healthcare systems. In the last years, a better knowledge of the inflammatory pathways has promoted several alternative therapeutic options and new treatment goals, as well as new biomarkers and tools to predict and monitor the disease course. Biological therapies have provided important tools to treat IBD patients, as shown by anti-Tumor Necrosis Factor (TNF) agents, vedolizumab and ustekinumab. However, the wider spectrum of biologicals is sometimes also associated with an increased risk of infections and malignancies and the treating physician is encountered by many pharmacodynamic and pharmacokinetic questions with relevance for daily clinical practice. In parallel, treatment goals have shifted from symptomatic control towards more objective endpoints, namely mucosal healing, transmural healing (evaluated by cross sectional imaging), and histological remission. Historically, the medical management of IBD has been based on the use of several broadly acting anti-inflammatory drugs such as corticosteroids, thiopurines and mesalamine. New therapeutic options have been emerging and it becomes highly important to integrate all these concepts into algorithms easily perceived by physicians managing IBD patients.

The International Symposium 210 "Crossing New Borders in IBD: Thoughts and Demands – From Mechanisms to Treatment", in Estoril/Lisbon from April 20-21, 2018 aims to critically discuss established and emerging new concepts in the diagnosis, treatment and monitoring of IBD. What we have: 1 - "Omics" science in IBD with emphasis in Host-microbiom interaction; 2 - Revealing therapeutic targets for IBD treatment from cytokines, T-cells trafficking and fibrogenesis; 3 - Metrics in IBD, how to evaluate damage and severity; 4 - How to shape the old drugs; 5 - Integrating the old, the new and the future in algorithms. Special emphasis will be directed to the multidisciplinary management of complex IBD patients, namely intra-abdominal abscess, stenosis of small and large bowel in CD, anal disease, and treatment of extra intestinal manifestations. We also have a multidisciplinary session to adress microscopic colitis as an inflammatory disease or only drugs induced disease entity?

All speakers and moderators are internationally recognized IBD experts and build the basis for an up-to-date state-of-the-art symposium on IBD. The program was designed to provide opportunities for ample discussion and interaction with speakers, moderators and attendees.

We like to welcome you in Estoril/Lisbon. Lisbon is one of the oldest cities in the world, and the oldest in Western Europe, enjoys a Mediterranean climate and most of the Portuguese expeditions of the age of discovery left Lisbon during the 15-17th century. This period saw the rise of the exuberant Manueline style in architecture, which left its mark in many 16th century monuments. We hope that you will enjoy your stay!
