Friday 18th
January 2019

UCL Great Ormond Street Institute of Child Health, London

This popular one-day course run jointly by the Institute of Psychiatry and the UCL GOS Institute of Child Health aims to update senior clinicians on the latest clinical and research findings in child and adolescent mental health. Traditionally this biennial course has attracted delegates from across the UK and beyond.

This year the course will include a series of talks from experts on a diverse range of subjects including the latest interventions in conduct disorder, mental health in schools, prescribing and neuroimaging in ADHD and genetic advances in intellectual disability, anxiety and depression. It also includes two short presentations on topical new research into the use of the Mental Health Act in Children and Adolescents and the mental health of young refugees.

The day will close with a drinks reception in the Winter Garden.

Who should attend?

The course is practical in nature and is suitable for senior clinicians working in child and adolescent mental health from all disciplines.

Objectives

- To update senior clinicians working in child and adolescent mental health on the latest clinical and research findings on a diverse range of subjects.
