Overview

Miami Valves 2016 showcases the latest in transcatheter valve replacement and is the natural progression of the University of Miami's Masters in Repair of Structural Heart Disease (MIRS) Conference which has a long history of excellence. Miami Valves 2016 will update medical professionals on the latest systems, techniques and practices to ensure safe and effective transcatheter valve replacement.

GAP ANALYSIS

Gaps in the diagnosis and treatment of structural heart disease will be reduced to improve patient outcomes by addressing the gaps with interventional and invasive cardiologists.

- Appraise new and upcoming technologies in the management of valvular heart disease to determine their benefit for patients
- Evaluate the relative advantages and disadvantages of different strategies in complex cases involving valvular disease
- Demonstrate how to start a Transcatheter Aortic Valve Replacement (TAVR) program

TARGET AUDIENCE

This program is designed for:

- Interventional and invasive cardiologists, general cardiologists, cardiovascular surgeons, vascular surgeons, interventional radiologists
- Physicians, nurses, technologists and healthcare professionals with an interest in cardiovascular disease, structural heart disease therapies, vascular medicine and thoracic surgery

OBJECTIVES

- Appraise new and upcoming technologies in the management of structural heart disease, including valvular heart disease, stroke prevention, hemodynamic support, cardiomyopathy and high-risk percutaneous coronary intervention to determine their benefit for patients
- Evaluate the relative advantages and disadvantages of different strategies in complex cases involving valvular disease
- Present indications, techniques, outcomes, and complications for transcatheter valve intervention in patients with native valve lesions
- Compare FDA approved technologies for TAVR and the scientific data supporting their use
- Examine best practice techniques for high certainty valve implantation
- Analyze data and techniques for treatment of bioprosthetic valve dysfunction
- Evaluate the rationale, challenges, and necessity of the heart team approach to valvular heart disease, and the functionality of the team within a center of excellence
- Evoke the changing landscape of percutaneous and surgical techniques of valve repair and replacement
- Evaluate the barriers to care in patients with valvular heart disease with specific attention to current gaps in the timely delivery of percutaneous and surgical interventions
- Recognize the different diagnostic tools and combinations required to accurately diagnose specific structural heart diseases and plan transcatheter therapy
- Discuss rationale and technique of alternative access approach for aortic stenosis
- Discuss investigational valves in the near horizon including their therapeutic advantages and limitations catheterization

- Describe the advantages and pitfalls of comprehensive diagnostic techniques for patients with valvular heart disease such as cardiac computed tomography, three-dimensional echocardiography, and complex invasive hemodynamic catheterization
- Discuss transcatheter treatment options for mitral valve disease
- Explain the clinical data supporting mitral valve leaflet clip approximation for the treatment of mitral regurgitation
- Demonstrate and present best practice techniques for mitral valve clip approximation
- Examine alternative investigational devices for the transcatheter treatment of mitral regurgitation
- Present alternatives with transcatheter aortic and pulmonic valve technologies for the treatment of mitral disease
- Present progress in transcatheter mitral valve replacement
- Present the techniques and efficacy of transcatheter treatment of mitral prosthetic valve paravalvular leaks
- Demonstrate how septal ablation and MitraClip can improve mitral regurgitation in hypertrophic cardiomyopathy
