ERCP Boot Camp for the GI Team 2.1

Friday and Saturday, December 2-3, 2016

Course Description

A strong physician-nurse team is essential to optimize patient care. This course offers a unique environment that emphasizes team dynamics and focuses on the distinct technical roles of physicians and assistants (RN or GI technician), who must work hand-in-hand to achieve the highest success for ERCP procedures. Pancreaticobiliary endoscopy teams of physicians, nurses, technologists, and associates are encouraged to attend the course together.

The course is structured with didactic and hands-on sessions. The didactic portion will highlight established approaches and new techniques related to ERCP practice. Lectures using a case-based approach that incorporate videos and images will be stressed. During the didactic session, there will be ample time for attendee-faculty interaction.

Hands-on sessions will emphasize proper use of technologies and techniques with instructor physicians and nurses directly teaching attendee physicians, nurses, and assistants. Teamwork will be highlighted, as success requires not only individual technical proficiency, but also deliberate and calm communication between physician and assistant. Valuable pointers to optimize technique and team interaction will be provided, as procedural success is inherently linked to physician understanding and insight into the assistant's role, and vice-versa. Fluoroscopy will be used for select hands-on stations to enhance the learning experience.

Although individuals may register for the course, the focus is on a team-based approach and it is recommended that multiple members of the GI team attend the course together to maximize the experience.

Upon completion of this educational activity, participants will be able to:

- Describe proper indications for ERCP and use of new ERCP-related technologies and techniques.
