Linking Diet and Disease - Melbourne 2018

2 Day Conference for Nurses

Need for Program

The established connections between chronic illness and food mean that increasingly, nurses are required to explain why and engage with patients to meaningfully improve their health. This ability to recognise and act on clinical indicators of impaired health as a result of diet is becoming a key feature of modern nursing. Nurses growingly need to demonstrate nutritional literacy so as to assist a person to improve their health outcomes, and importantly, prevent, and in some cases, treat their disease. As people, often with the same questions and struggles as their patients, there's a timely need time to empower nurses to help themselves, in order to help others.

Purpose of Program

The purpose of this conference is to examine the link between diet and disease and integrate this knowledge into nursing practice so as to improve health outcomes for patients.

Learning Outcomes

At the conclusion of this program it is expected that the participants will be able to:

- Understand the broad link between certain foods and chronic illness, and explain this to your patient
- Use the data from a nutritional assessment to assist in the identification and improvement of a patient's health status
- Explain simple approaches to weight loss and maintenance to your patients to assist them to overcome barriers to weight loss
- Combine holistic nursing and health coaching principles to engage with patients and enable them to improve their health outcomes
