0900 - 1700	WORKSHOP: Self-Care and Self Compassion – Crucial for ourselves and our patients Katrina Anderson, Jason Mills, Jonathan Ramachandran & Olivia Tough
	Mental, emotional, and spiritual care of ourselves as professionals is probably one of the most important aspects of our competence as practitioners but many of us have been too busy to take time to reflect or think about this. Self-reflective practice is crucial to quality patient care because one of the most important things we bring to the doctor patient relationship is ourselves. The pandemic has been challenging for all health professionals and most of us are fatigued, tired and wondering about our work. The work we do involves dealing with suffering and this can make us very vulnerable to stress and burnout. This workshop will be a precious day of space and time to reflect on and share the experiences of our daily work in palliative care and identify our current requirements for self-care and self-compassion
