Individualized Medicine: A View at the Crossroads of Promise and Practice

In June of 2000, President Clinton held a press conference with Craig Venter and Francis Collins to announce the successful sequencing of the human genome and declare that this achievement "will revolutionize the diagnosis and treatment of most if not all human disease". Since that time, while we have seen significant advances in research, many have wondered about the impact to the practice of medicine that was promised back in June of 2000. Dr. Parker will discuss how Mayo Clinic has moved genomic-based medicine "from promise to practice" by sharing several examples of significant impact happening in the clinic today. Moreover, he will discuss the future of "individualized medicine" as we move deeper in to what is being called the fourth industrial revolution of big data and connectivity.

Joint Presidential Keynote Lecture

Miles O'Brien is a veteran independent journalist who focuses on science, technology and aerospace. He is the science correspondent for PBS NewsHour, a producer and director for NOVA on PBS, and a correspondent for FRONTLINE and the National Science Foundation Science Nation series.

He was scheduled to become the first journalist to fly on the space shuttle. The project ended with the loss of Columbia and her crew in 2003 – a story he told to the world in a critically acclaimed sixteen-hour marathon of live coverage.

In February of 2014, a heavy equipment case fell on his forearm while he was on assignment. He developed Acute Compartment Syndrome, which necessitated the emergency amputation of his left arm above the elbow.

R. BARRETT NOONE, MD, FACS
ASRM President's Lecture

Dr. Noone gained international recognition as a pioneer in developing and promoting reconstruction of the female breast at the time of mastectomy. Controversial at the time in the 1970s and early 1980s, immediate reconstruction is now the standard of care. His early publications on the technical results, oncological safety and psychological benefit to the patient are included in his contributions of over 100 peer-reviewed scientific articles, book chapters and the textbook, Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery of the Breast. An endowed lecture in his name is presented regularly at the annual meeting of the American Association of Plastic Surgeons.

JAN JEROEN VRANCKX, MD, PhD
ASRM Godina Lecture

Dr. Vranckx is Professor and Chief of the Department of Plastic, Reconstructive & Aesthetic Surgery at KU Leuven University Hospitals, Leuven, Belgium.

He trained at the Leuven University Hospitals, which has a long tradition in microsurgery. During training he worked abroad in the Sao Joao Hospital in Oporto and in the Chang Gung Memorial Hospital in Taipei. He completed a 2-year research fellowship on ex-vivo strategies in tissue engineering at BWH in Boston. He founded the Laboratory of Plastic Surgery and Tissue Engineering Research in Leuven after his return to Belgium, and obtained a PhD in Biomedical Sciences from KUL Leuven University in 2007.
