Renaissance New Orleans Arts
Warehouse District Hotel
New Orleans, LA

Purpose

To provide physicians, advanced practice providers, nurses, and other staff involved with patient care an overview of the latest breakthroughs and practical approaches in evaluating and treating patients with digestive and liver diseases. Recently published data will be reviewed, and controversies related to managing various GI and liver conditions will be discussed.

Educational Objectives:

By the end of this conference, the participant should be able to:

1. Recognize the minimally-invasive techniques that can be used to treat GI tract disorders
2. Review current issues leading to provider burnout, including gender-based issues impacting GI practice
3. Understand new developments related to managing liver disease and complications of cirrhosis
4. Demonstrate endoscopic techniques utilized in treating various GI tract disorders
5. Identify best practice for preparing patients for endoscopic procedures
6. Learn ergonomic techniques to reduce endoscopy related musculoskeletal injury
7. Apply the best evidence in managing patients with pancreatic necrosis

Target Audience

Gastroenterologists, Infectious Disease Specialists, General Surgeons, Primary Care Physicians, Advanced Practice Clinicians, Nurses, Residents and Fellows.
