GCTS Invited Panel - Session 3.6 - Ongoing Armed Conflict, Child Maltreatment, and Global Prevalence of Trauma: the Added Value of Global Collaboration in Addressing Topics of International Importance

Meeting Room 4 (90T)

Trauma is a global issue. Traumatic experiences, trauma-related symptoms, as well as treatment approaches differ across cultures. Therefore, collaborating across national boundaries and traumatic stress societies joining forces will enhance our understanding and eventually benefit those confronted with trauma. The “Global Collaboration on Traumatic Stress (GCTS)” is a collaborative initiative which consists of researchers and clinicians from around the globe and represents traumatic stress societies worldwide (ESTSS, ISTSS, JSTSS, ASTSS, ACET, SAPsi, KSTSS, CPA-TSS, DeGPT). It has an active student and early career section. This interactive panel will start with an outline of the GCTS’ history, background, its principles and structure. Then we will illustrate the added value of global collaboration by highlighting three themes: Armed conflict, Child maltreatment, and Global prevalence of trauma and trauma-related disorders. Special attention will be paid to GTCS’ added value to members at various career stages (from students to more advanced) and from different geographies, including how GCTS’ global network supported their careers (e.g., research and practice), what opportunities it created for them, how it helped them advance in, or amplify, their ongoing work/studies and address research and practice gaps between countries. The panel will end with a discussion with the audience and may result in new collaborations!

ISTSS Invited Panel - Session 5.6 - PTSD in diverse populations and diverse contexts: From epidemiological insights to scalable interventions

Meeting Room 4 (90T)

Presentations of posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) can vary by population, culture, geography, and comorbidity (e.g., cardiovascular disease and sleep-related disorders), influencing the choice, acceptability, and effectiveness of evidence-based treatments (EBTs). In this symposium, we address the interface of PTSD and cardiovascular disease, interventions to target pernicious PTSD symptoms, such as sleep and moral injury, and EBT delivery in diverse geographic and cultural contexts. First, Dr. Brian Smith will highlight the impact of wartime service and post-military PTSD and depression on CVD risk using data from two epidemiologic studies of U.S. women and men who served on active duty during the Vietnam War. Findings underscore the need for trauma-informed care to prevent and screen for chronic disease development in populations at heightened risk, such as military and veteran populations. Second, Dr. Andrea Phelps will address sleep and circadian disturbances that are highly prevalent in veterans and first responders and, left untreated, may predict the development of mental health disorders such as depression and PTSD. She will discuss the results of a trial of Transdiagnostic Sleep and Circadian Intervention (TranS-C) for veterans and first responders with varied sleep disturbances, and a follow-up trial targeting circadian rhythms through regulating light exposure. Symptoms of PTSD include guilt and shame, with many trauma survivors suffering emotional consequences for having had to take actions during their trauma that went against deeply held values. Guilt and shame, which may be signs of co-occurring moral injury, are linked to impairment in functioning and suicide risk and may require targeted intervention. Dr. Sonya Norman will describe a program of research to study Trauma Informed Guilt Reduction Therapy, an intervention to address moral injury and trauma-related guilt and shame. With regards to EBTs, scalable clinician training is important for increasing utility, and improving access and impact. This requires appropriate training and supervision. Dr. Bita Gafoori will share insights from two pilot studies of Narrative Exposure Therapy (NET) training in Chile and Portugal. Findings suggest that training in NET may be feasible in diverse communities. Training in NET improves knowledge and clinician attitudes towards an evidence-based PTSD treatment; however, additional follow-up training and supervision are required in order to adequately implement NET with fidelity. To disseminate EBTs widely across geographic boundaries, culturally and contextually informed and co-developed adaptations of EBTs are needed. Dr. Judy Bass will examine the core considerations and challenges for cross-context adaptation, implementation and scale-up to widen access to EBTs for trauma-related conditions, including PTSD, including the training of non-specialist interventionists and the use of culturally-congruent outcome measures.

Clare Killikelly, University of Zurich, Dr. Justina Pociūnaitė-Ott, University of Twente IRCT invited panel - Session 7.6 - Empowering Survivors: Advancing the Global Fight Against Torture Through Agency and Justice Meeting Room 4 (90T) The global landscape of torture continues to evolve, presenting complex challenges that intersect with migration, conflict, war, and other gross human rights violations. Torture-related trauma affects individuals and communities in profound ways, with consequences that can persist across generations. According to Amnesty International's latest global report on torture, 44 countries have been identified as having a high level of risk of torture. The report also highlights the need for a global framework to address torture, and the importance of empowering survivors to seek justice and support.

141 states—three-quarters of the world—still use torture to punish and silence people under their control. As a result, at least 100,000 victims worldwide require life-saving medical care. Several factors contribute to the persistence of torture, including the global rise of authoritarianism and populism, an increasing number of conflicts—the highest since World War II—the failure of warring states to protect civilians, the criminalization of migration, the retention of exceptional powers initially introduced to address COVID-19, massive prison overcrowding, and a widespread lack of protection for marginalized and discriminated groups. In response to these challenges, the International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims (IRCT) plays a crucial role in supporting survivors. As an umbrella organization for 172 rehabilitation centers worldwide, the IRCT provides assistance to up to 72,000 torture survivors annually. Recognizing the importance of a coordinated response, this panel will highlight the IRCT’s work and discuss the necessity of bridging research and practice to ensure effective, holistic rehabilitation. A central element of the IRCT’s global approach is survivor engagement, which is understood in three critical areas: governance, health, and human rights advocacy. By involving survivors as key stakeholders, the IRCT ensures they not only influence but also take control of their own rehabilitation journeys, fostering a sense of agency and justice. Survivor-driven initiatives are essential to the global fight against torture, as they empower individuals to contribute to both policy-making and practical rehabilitation efforts. This panel will feature survivors from the International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims’ Survivor Board (IRCT’s SAB). Panelists will discuss the transformative role of survivor engagement in the global anti-torture movement and explore how fostering survivor agency can shape holistic rehabilitation practices.
